How the G7 Plans to Counter Economic Coercion by China

AP PHOTOS

“Without naming China specifically, G7 leaders condemned coercive economic actions,” writes Communications Officer Libby Berry. “Last June, Council President Ivo Daalder and the Alliance on Democracies’ Anders Fogh Rasmussen pointed to the group as a potential ‘clearinghouse’ for their proposed ‘Economic Article 5,’ inspired by the NATO security guarantee in which an attack on one is treated as an attack on all.”

American Views of Immigration and Diversity

PUBLIC OPINION

Immigration crackdowns set the tone for Ron DeSantis' presidential run, prompting concerns from civil rights groups. When it comes to legal border crossings, 43 percent of Americans believe that immigration should be kept at present levels. And political affiliation is far more closely associated with immigration policy preferences than race or ethnicity, according to Council-New America Foundation research.

Turkey and the Power of Controlling the Narrative

COMMENTARY

“Whether or not Erdoğan prevails in the runoff, let Turkey’s election be a reminder that a free vote means little in the face of a false narrative,” writes Senior Fellow Elizabeth Shackelford in the Chicago Tribune. “Concentrated corporate control of the press can be just as dangerous and effective as direct government obstruction of independent media.”
